Introduction

The maritime industry is governed by international regulations that establish standards for the employment, welfare, safety, and rights of seafarers. Among these regulations, the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006 (MLC, 2006) serves as a comprehensive framework that protects seafarers while promoting fair competition and compliance within the maritime sector.

This course provides participants with an overview of maritime labour law and the key requirements of MLC, 2006, focusing on seafarers' rights and obligations, employment conditions, working and rest hours, occupational health and safety, complaint procedures, and compliance requirements. The programme aims to enhance participants' understanding of maritime labour standards and support effective implementation of MLC requirements onboard ships and within maritime organisations.

Course Objectives

Upon completion of this course, participants will be able to:

- Understand the principles of maritime labour law and MLC requirements.
- Identify the rights and obligations of seafarers and employers.
- Apply requirements related to employment agreements and working conditions.
- Interpret regulations governing hours of work and rest.
- Recognise occupational health and safety requirements onboard ships.
- Understand complaint procedures and compliance mechanisms.
- Support MLC compliance and maritime labour inspections.
